Co-writer-producer-director Pang Ho-Cheung's DREAM HOME is playing at the Tribeca Film Festival. Here's a peek at the new poster for the film, which should be DVDebuting this summer, check it out below!

Shock Til You Drop posted the one-sheet. Here's the DREAM HOME synopsis:

"When she was a child, Cheng Lai-Sheung (Josie Ho) could see Hong Kong's famed Victoria harbor from her apartment. But as time passed, the old buildings in front of her home were demolished to make way for a huge residential project, No. 1 Victoria Bay, which now blocks her view. Increasingly disappointed and upset, she vowed to one day save up enough money for her family to move into No. 1 Victoria Bay with a magnificent sea view.

In order to achieve her dream, Cheng has to work hard at two full-time jobs. She even goes as far as stealing customer data to sell to other companies. However, no matter how much she toils, she cannot earn enough to keep up with the ever-increasing values of Hong Kong's real estate. Since property prices keep leaping higher, her dream home now seems forever out of reach...until suddenly it dawns on her: In order to get what she wants, she must take matters into her own hands...even if it means getting her hands seriously bloody."

Learn more about DREAM HOME and watch the trailer at the official site

Look for more coverage on DREAM HOME soon and check out a review of POSSESSED, another one of this year's Tribeca's Horror Selections here .

{jcomments on}