Written by Chris Alexander
Friday, 26 March 2010 14:02

Well, well. Here we are...

My first Blood Spattered Blog posting after inheriting the keys to the chocolate factory. And I'm going to use it to call attention to one of the weirdest, most eyeball spinning events in recent live television history. Something that blew my brains when I saw it and yet, somehow, has failed to have the sort of ultra impact on the people in question that it should have.

If you know who Larry King is, the owl-eyed host of his own show on CNN, you know that the man is an icon of news media. And yet, like questions surrounding the creation of Stonehenge, the mystery of King's continued popularity is baffling.

This boner (and by boner, I mean error…though sure, King is a boner too) is so grand, that instead of relating it in print for you, I'll show you a little clip of a recent appearance on conservative Canadian talk show THE MICHAEL COREN SHOW (I'm the token freak-o brought on the show to rave-on) where I fill both the viewers—and surprisingly, the host—in on this operatic fk up.

Here 'tis.

{youtube}zbnGbbvg7y8{/youtube}

And here's the jaw-dropping clip in question...

{youtube}YZFrquwn75A{/youtube}

Yeah, nice cover up Larry.

If you still believe that this man King deserves a high profile program on one of the most watched and respected TV news outlets on the planet, than you’re out to lunch and there ye shall stay…

Alexander out.