

Lindelof chats about “PROMETHEUS”

Written by Allan Dart

Tuesday, 28 June 2011 13:48

LOST producer and screenwriter Damon Lindelof appeared on The Kevin Pollak Chat Show and talked about his work on Ridley Scott's PROMETHEUS.

Slashfilm published some of Lindelof's web video interview on The Kevin Pollak Chat Show, and here's what the screenwriter had to say about PROMETHEUS:

“It started as an ALIEN prequel. That is what everybody wanted it to be. Obviously, Ridley Scott has not made a science fiction movie in 25 years, since BLADE RUNNER, so the idea that he's returning to this genre is huge. But there is a real issue which is—what is the state of the ALIEN franchise at this point in our lives? There has been ALIEN VS. PREDATOR and all these things, and it's been completely and totally diluted. I've always felt that really good prequels should be original movies. And the sequels to those prequels should not be the movie which already exists because, with all due respect to anyone who makes a prequel, but why would you ruin the greatest twist in the history of cinema, 'Luke, I am your father,' by showing me three movies which basically spoil that surprise. You can do movies which take place before STAR WARS, but I don't need to see the story of the Skywalker clan. Show me something else which I can't guess the possible outcome of. There is no suspense in inevitability. So a true prequel should essentially proceed the events of the original film, but be about something entirely different, feature different characters, have an entirely different theme, although it takes place in that same world. That was my fundamental feeling about what this movie wanted to be.

“And truth be told, it wasn't script doctoring in the strictest sense because the draft that existed before I came on was written by this guy named Jon Spaihts and it was very good. And there were a lot of things in the movie, PROMETHEUS, which were Jon Spaihts and I feel like somewhere in the media reconstruction of this story, the tale is that I come in, I pitch an entirely new story, and it's so original that everything else gets thrown out and that's what we're doing. In my brain, that's not exactly what happened. But I also do feel that this movie is the movie I would want to see as a fanboy, take place in that ALIEN universe, which precedes the events of the original ALIEN, but is not necessarily burdened by all the tropes of that franchise with Facehuggers and Chestbursters, and all that stuff that I love... But it's sorta like, we've seen it before, can we do something different this time? And that's the movie that Ridley wanted to make. And when you're working with an auteur, you basically just shut your mouth and listen and try to transcribe and channel the vision of that person, and get out of the way.”