

Mondo's Vinyl to make you a "MANIAC" on the floor

Written by Samuel Zimmerman
Monday, 03 October 2011 18:25

---

The arms of Mondo keep sprouting. The Alamo Drafthouse's collectible arts boutique is moving into vinyl releases with a remastered edition of Jay Chattaway's score to William Lustig's classic MANIAC, on sale tomorrow.

Going live, as all of their products do, at a random time announced by their Twitter feed, the MANIAC LP will sell for $20, and is limited to 500 copies. Here's what Mondo had to say:

We're very excited to finally announce our record label, a project that has been in production for what seems like forever. Tomorrow we'll release our first ever vinyl record, a remastered version of Jay Chattaway's stunning soundtrack for MANIAC. Originally unleashed in 1980, William Lustig's MANIAC is one of the few films the entire Mondo crew can agree on. Joe Spinell's lead performance is spellbinding. Lustig's direction screams seedy, skin-crawling authenticity. And Chattaway's score is the twine that ties the whole blood-soaked package together. It's caustic and raw, claustrophobic and terrifying, and a perfect compliment to the one of the filthiest, grainiest films in horror history. Chattaway eventually went on to score numerous Star Trek episodes, but his work on MANIAC marks the pinnacle of grime. We've outfitted this deluxe 200 gram LP with new artwork by Ken Taylor, liner notes by Lars Nilsen, and newly remastered audio by James Plotkin. It's limited to 500 copies total, including 175 on randomly-inserted colored vinyl. Get your turntables ready, they'll be available for $20 tomorrow (Tuesday, October 4th) at a random time. Watch our Twitter closely!

For more, you can see the artwork below and keep up with Mondo via their Twitter and official site

