Here's the RED LIGHTS synopsis: Veteran paranormal researchers Dr. Margaret Matheson (Weaver) and Tom Buckley (Murphy) debunk fraudulent claims of ghost whispering, faith healing and other psychic phenomena by detecting what Matheson calls “red lights,” the subtle tricks behind every staged supernatural occurrence. But when the legendary blind psychic Simon Silver (De Niro) comes out of retirement after 30 years, his once-fearless adversary Matheson warns Buckley to back off, fearing reprisal from the powerful Silver.

Determined to discredit Silver, Buckley and his star student (Olsen) use every tool at their disposal to uncover the truth behind the charismatic, spoon-bending mind reader. But Buckley is forced to reexamine his own core beliefs as his quest builds to a mind-blowing conclusion in this taut psychological thriller.

Reviewing the film, Allistar Pinsof of Flixist.com said, “RED LIGHTS is a very smart film that owes much to Hitchcock,” while Nicholas Bell of Ioncinema noted, “Cortés has created not only a film that lends itself open to interpretation, but one also worthy of multiple viewings.” Likewise, William Goss of Indiwire.com commented, “RED LIGHTS kept us on our toes, if not in the traditional sense. It's a bold effort by Cortés to step up his directorial game.” Finally, Erik Childress of eFilmCritic.com praised, “This is the second horror subgenre that Cortés has injected fresh life into.”
