Produced by the Duplass Brothers and starring comedy hero Ken Marino, MILO gets a great poster promising toilets, monsters and a parrot on the shoulder of Peter Stormare.

"Duncan's life is a real pain in the ass," so begins the official synopsis for MILO, which proceeds to list off his daily stress inducers, until it finally arrives at the tiny demon that's created a nest within Duncan's intestine. "Out of fear that his intestinal gremlin may target its wrath on the wrong person, Duncan attempts to befriend it, naming it Milo and indulging it to keep its seemingly insatiable appetite at bay."

Directed by Jacob Vaughan, MILO's pedigree extends beyond the aforementioned Marino (THE STATE, PARTY DOWN, WET HOT AMERICAN SUMMER) with COMMUNITY's Gillian Jacobs, Patrick Warburton (THE TICK, SEINFELD) and Stormare. You can find its trash-reminiscent poster below, as well as its screening schedule at the fast approaching SXSW. For more, head right here.
